

THE GREEN BAY PACKERS 2008

Posted At : December 27, 2008 9:33 PM | Posted By : Rich Koslowski

Related Categories: Rich's Rants

Yup, a pretty craptastic season for The Pack.

But for those out there blaming it on the Favre trade, forget it. Grow up. Aaron Rodgers was not the Pack's problem nor was the offense.

The did enough to win at least 9-10 games all on their own. The blame goes directly on the defense this year and moreso even on the pitiful Special Teams!!! The Special Teams performance was consistently horrific this season...was it just me or did it seem like every time the offense had a terrific long drive for a score--a very IMPORTANT drive for a score--late in the game, the Special Teams kicked off and the opposing team was instantly at mid-field??? Then, BOOM! BOOM! BOOM! Three plays later they're in the end zone! How many games did we see this this year?!

And, once again, versus the hated Bears this past Monday night they did it again. Pack sustains a great drive to put them up in the score and the ST and defense give it right back on 3-4 plays. THEN, the offense gets us back within field goal range with just seconds left in the game and the ST eff it up by having the kick blocked.

'Course it goes into overtime but by then the outcome was a foregone conclusion wasn't it? Especially when the Bears won the coin toss and elected to receive. You just knew it was a matter of 3-4 plays again and game over.

And, yep, sure 'nuff, exactly what happened.

So to all you "See, they shouldn't have traded Favre!" guys out there, again, I say "grow up."

I also say you probably know nothing about football.

Thassit for this week. Had a decent enough holiday--Stella was in heaven.

New 3 Geeks comic hits the stands in January and has an all-new cover! Different than the exclusive and slightly different than what was shown in the Previews ad.

Bet you're just tingling with anticipation now ain'tcha?

word.

R